SENDS CATHOL[illegible] TO ORANGE HALL

Alleged Trick by Returning Officer of Lennox and Addington

What looks like an attempt to compel a score of Roman Catholic voters to mark their ballots in an Orange Halll, or to discourage those twenty electors from voting at all because of their aversion to Orangeism, was explained to The Toronto Globe by J. L. Haycock, the old-time leader of the Patrons of Industry, whose post office address is Adolphustown, in the riding of Lennox and Addington.

Mr. Haycock showed the Globe a copy of the election proclammation sheet, for which Mr. George F. Ruttan, K.C., of Napanee, the Chief Returning Officer for that constituency, is responsible. In all but one of the subdivisions where two polling booths are necessary the electors are alphabetically divided into two groups: those with the initial letter beeween "A" and "M," and those between "N" and "Z," inclusive in both cases.

The exception is the subdivision of the Township of Richmond, in which is situated the Village of Selby. In this subdivision they are divided "A" to "L," and "M" to "Z," inclusive in both cases. Mr. Haycock told the Globe that there are twenty-three Roman Catholic voters in that subdivision, three of whom fall in the first group, and twenty in the second group. And here is where the rub comes in: The group "A" to "L" vote in the town hall of Selby, and the "M" to "Z" group vote in the Orange Hall in Selby.

Why, Mr. Haycock asks, was the alphabetical division for the Township of Richmond made different from that of all the other subdivisions in that riding and elsewhere? The moving of the boundary line one letter to the left throws all the Roman Catholic "M's" into the Orange Hall group. Mr. Haycock adds that he is sure it will not deter any of them from voting.

LLOYD GEORGE COMING

Plans to Spend His Christmas in Washington.

Presence Imperatively Needed If Danger of Failure of Arms Conference Is to Be Averted—British Premier's Diplomatic Tact Expected to Harmonize Divergent Views — Irish Problems Must Wait.

LONDON, Nov. 28. — Premier Lloyd George is "morally certain" that his next Christmas will be spent in Washington. Those were the words used by a member of the Prime Minister's entourage to describe his outlook on the correlated situation created by the arms parley and the Irish negotiations.

Lloyd George has received so many messages, both from this side and from America, urging that he should go to Washington that he has gone so far as to book his passage by the Aquitania next Saturday.

The Prime Minister's hopefulness is based on the conviction that only a negligible number of the people, either in England or Ireland, want the Irish negotiations to break down. It is agreed that the statement which Sir James Craig will read before the Ulster Parliament this week will leave the door open for a continuance of the negotiations upon new lines, if it is found that agreement cannot be reached upon the lines that have so far been explored.

The political correspondent of the Sunday Times says:

"If he can clean up here in time Lloyd George will sail Saturday next, but, at any rate, his departure will not be delayed longer than the following week, so that he will be in Washington by the middle of December at the latest. No date can be fixed for his return, but it is probable that he will sail again early in the new year, so as to reach home in time to discuss with his Cabinet the program of the new Parliamentary session.

"Til as the Prime Minister can be spared from Downing Street while the Irish negotiations are still in mid-channel and their fate uncertain, the turn that has been given to the discussions at Washington renders it imperative that he should cross the Atlantic without delay, if the conference is not to peter out ingloriously.

"It has been borne in on them however, that, despite the excellent send-off that the conference received in Mr. Hughes' speech, its opportunities have been not a little frittered away by lack of experience in handling international matters, and they are looking to the British Premier, with his prestige and popularity, to pilot them through the shallows they have reached.

"If 'tis done, then 'twere well it were done quickly, and Lloyd George will not stand on the order of his going."

PROPER FEEDING IS ESSENTIAL TO WINTER EGG PRODUCTION

If satisfactory profits are to be obtained from the keeping of hens, it is necessary that eggs be produced during the season of scarcity and high prices.

Eggs laid in November and December will usually fetch from two to three times the price of eggs in April and May.

Poultrymen should, therefore, put forth every effort towards the production of winter eggs. Success depends, very largely, upon the care and feed which the flock is given. There are other feeds besides the grain and water commonly fed, that are essential, if heavy winter production is to be expected. The most important of these are the green feeds and the animal feeds, and it cannot be too strongly emphasized that these are absolutely necessary to high production. Green feed may be supplied in the form of mangels, clover hay, sprouted oats, waste cabbage or vegetable parings, while animal feed may be given in the form of milk, green cut bones, beef scraps or digestive tankage.

The following method of feeding should give satisfactory results: Morning, a light feed of scratch grain scattered in the litter; noon, a moist mash may be given in which is mixed table scraps or green cut bone; night, a full feed of scratch grain.

In addition to the forementioned a constant supply of grit, oyster shell, charcoal and fresh water should be kept before the flock at all times, also a dry mash. This mash may be made up of different ingridients, but one that will give good results is bran, middlings, corn meal, ground oats and meat meal, equal parts. If milk is available, or green cut bone is being used, the percentage of meat meal may be reduced. Feed the whole grain sparingly so as to get the flock to consume a large proportion of mash, as it is always noticeable that the consumption of mash is greater when production is at its highest.

Curing Clover Hay.

One of the most successful methods for handling sweet clover hay, especially in regions where rains are likely to occur at haying time, is to permit it to lie in the swath until the plants are well wilted or just before the leaves begin to curl. The hay should then be raked into windrows and cocked at once. The cocks should be made as high and narrow as possible, as this will permit better ventilation. In curing, the cocks will shrink from one-third to one-half their original size. It may take ten days to two weeks to cure sweet clover by this method, but when well cured all the leaves will be intact and the hay will have an excellent color and aroma. When sweet clover is cocked at this time the leaves will cure flat and in such manner that the cocks will readily shed water during heavy rains.

AS TO "SATURDAY NIGHT"

The Toronto weekly "Saturday Night," having gone out of its way to attack the Smoot Service Corporation, Smoot and Dickson and other business firms in Toronto and elsewhere, an expert has looked up the record of H. T. Gagnier and "Saturday Night" with the following result :

A DISGRACE TO CANADIAN NEWSPAPERDOM

"Saturday Night's" own estimate, January 20th, 1906 :

Paid-up shares, $50,000 ; plant, $20,000—$70,000.

Bradstreet's estimate, January 20th, 1906 :

"Estimated actually worth about $15,000 ; were transferred for $46,000." In other words, assets worth only $15,000 were unloaded for $46,000, a cash profit of over 200 per cent.

"Saturday Night" advises the public that no stock is safe on which over 10 per cent. is promised :

Harold T. Gagnier, President of Saturday Night, Limited, reported to Bradstreets on October 12th, 1908, as follows : "Last year we earned about 28 per cent."

On April 18th, 1910, Mr. Gagnier, reported to Bradstreets as follows : "Saturday Night is practically out of business."

Yet, on April 12th, 1912, "Saturday Night" succeeded in raising a bond mortgage of $50,000 from Britton Osler of Toronto.—Bradstreets Report.

Here is a concern, claiming $70,000 of assets in 1906, which Bradstreet's state was worth only $15,000 and which, according to the statement of their President was "practically out of business in 1910" ; but raised the sum of $50,000 in 1912. What does the public think of this kind of financing ?

Here is the method this concern uses to avade financial responsibility for the opinions it expresses and to get out of paying judgments that are standing against it.

H. T. Gagnier reports to Bradstreet's as follows :

"Saturday Night" prints its own paper and employs its own mechanical staff, renting machinery from Consolidated Press, Ltd." The latter, while owners of the paid-up capital stock of Saturday Night, are not in any way responsible for its debts. Practically nothing could be collected from "Saturday Night" under pressure.

On April 11th, 1917, Gagnier further stated, according to Bradstreet's Report : "Saturday Night, Ltd., have no assets and do no buying."

Bradstreet's opinion of Saturday Night, Ltd., dated 17th May, 1917 : "The actual financial responsibility is very slender."

The man who owns nothing can slander you and besmirch your character—and you have no redress. The man of financial responsibility must be cautious in his utterances. "Saturday Night, Ltd." belongs to the former class.—Financial Post, July 30th.

A Dream Fulfilled.

Dream premonitions have always left me somewhat incredulous when they happen to other people. But they sometimes happen to me. The other night I had a vivid dream of a man walking toward me in a principal street of my native town. He smiled, we spoke a few words—in the dream.

It was a man I hadn't seen or thought of for at least twenty years, and, though I had completely forgotten him when awake, I knew him in the dream. You will guess the sequel. Next afternoon I encountered him at the front door and started as he mentioned his name. He had the same smile on.—London Opinion.

ABOUT THE FARM WELL

A Most Important Factor in Agricultural Work.

Purity of the Water a Great Essential — Location Also of Importance — Construction Described— People on Farms Live Longest.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The well is the usual source of the farm water supply, and a good well, that is, one which supplies plenty of pure fresh and wholesome water the year round, is certainly one of the most essential and valuable assets of the farm. Without it no man could live there for long, to say nothing about bringing up a healthy family, or building up an efficient dairy herd. The well must be there first and last and all the time, and we cannot conceive of an intelligent man buying a farm without a good well if he intended to live on it and make it pay dividends.

A Good Water Supply Is Common.

Fortunately most of Ontario's farms are well supplied with water, in fact it is a rare thing to find a farm where it could not be secured in sufficient quantities by drilling to reasonable depths. The supply, therefore, will probably never cause us any serious worry, but judging by a recent report on analysis of many well waters from this province one seems justified in concluding that there is still need for education of the rural public in regard to the protection and care of the farm well. The following suggestions will be found helpful to any farmer desirous of making his water supply safe against possible underground and surface contamination.

Location of the Well Most Important.

The first step in the solution of this problem of purer water supply is the location of the well. This should be by all means on ground higher than any source of contamination such as barnyard, cesspool, or outside privy. If there should be no choice in location and this cannot be done, then the well should be kept a considerable distance from such contaminations, at least 100 feet in clay, and 200 feet or more in sandy soils, and the cribbing and top of the well specially protected as detailed later against the entrance of any seepage and surface washings.

How to Keep the Water Uncontaminated.

In the second place the cribbing for at least ten feet below the surface should be made impervious to water so that any contamination in solution reaching the well would have to pass down through this extra depth of soil before getting into the well, when in all probability it would be taken up by the soil and never reach the well water. This may be done in case of an old well by putting a wall of puddled clay one foot thick and ten feet deep around the well cribbing, and in case of a newly-dug well, or recribbing an old one, by using large concrete tile for the cribbing and setting the joints thoroughly in rich cement. Before the tile are placed in the well the outsides should be washed with pure cement plaster in order to fill up all pores and make the tile absolutely impervious to soil waters. Thirdly, the cribbing should be extended at least one foot above the ground level, and the soil banked up to the top of it, to provide good surface drainage away from the well. Fourthly, the well should be provided with a strong and tight-fitting cover made of heavy plank or concrete so that it will always be safe for man and beast, and proof against the entrance of dirt, small animals like frogs, etc.

Using a Second or Dry Well.

Even better still, the pump may be placed over a shallow dry well to one side and the top of the real well made absolutely tight by a concrete cover. In this case the well should be ventilated by putting a small iron pipe, with the exposed end turning downwards, through the top or cover. And, fifthly, the stock should not be allowed to tramp about close to the well.

What has been said refers chiefly to dug wells, but even the drilled or driven wells should be well drained and protected at the top, for otherwise contamination may work down along the well casing and reach the water, especially if the casing is not tightly driven into the rock below.

Attention to such matters of construction and protection of the farm well as here detailed, and an occasional pumping out and cleansing of the well with a little lime, will assure a pure and wholesome water supply.—R. R. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

People on Farms Live the Longest.

Life on the farm is the healthiest and safest, according to statistics compiled by the United States Bureau of Labor showing the average age at death in various occupations. The farmer and farm laborer live longer than other workers. This does not "seem longer," which, it will be remembered, is the joint in the old joke concerning the longevity of married folk contrasted with bachelors and spinsters—it is longer, and official research records prove it. Farmers live to the average age of 58.5 years, blacksmiths are given three years less of life, and masons and bricklayers die at an average age of 55. The list tapers down to bookkeepers and office assistants who are given an average life of no more than 36.5 years.

Bats in full flight in the dark will avoid threads stretched across their path.

LACROSSE CUSTOMS.

Game Was Picturesque When Played by Redmen.

Sometimes you will hear people talk in a joking manner of the amount of carnage that probably took place in a game of lacrosse when it was played by the Indians, before the white man had "civilized" it. Now, as a matter of fact, an Indian did not have to resort to a lacrosse stick in order to get even with some other redman to whom he owed a grudge. A tomahawk was a much more effective weapon.

According to the accounts of lacrosse, as played by the aborigines, left for us by pioneer writers, they really took part in it as a game, and not as a battle. Capt. Basil Hall's account of the Indians' idea of how to train, which included all-night orgies and bleedings, indicate that a redman had to be a fine physical specimen in order to excel at the game. In fact, he had to be a fine physical specimen in order to survive the training.

So far as the game itself is concerned, all accounts of it dwell entirely on its beauties and its picturesque features. George Catlin, the great ethnologist, whose book, "The Manners and Customs of the North American Indian," is generally recognized as the most authoritative treatise on that subject, waxes enthusiastic in his description of a tribal game of lacrosse. He says, "I pronounce such a scene with its hundreds of nature's most beautiful models, denuded and painted various colors, running and leaping in the air in all of the most enlivening and varied forms, in desperate struggles for the ball, a school for painter or sculptor equal to any of those which ever inspired the hand of the artist of the Olympic games or Roman forum."

In Lanman's book on the Indians one finds that lacrosse called the same comparisons to his mind. He tells us "The Olympic beauty of the game is beyond all praise. It calls into active exercise every muscle of the human frame, and brings into bold relief the supple and athletic forms of the best built men in the world. At one time a figure will rivet your attention similar to the Apollo Belvidere and at another you will actually be startled by the surpassing eloquence of a Mercury."

Lanman tells of an interesting custom that existed among the Cherokees. Before the game, the young squaws, who were the fans of their day and generation, ran out on the field and gave beaded tokens of favoritism to their dusky warriors, who wore them in the game like knights in the days of chivalry. Lanman adds, "This little ceremony struck me as particularly interesting, and I was greatly pleased with the bashfulness and yet complete confidence with which the Indian maidens manifested their preferences."

The custom has possibilities. If it had survived, there might be more young fellows eager to learn lacrosse to-day.

Pioneer Churches.

Increasing in population from 50 in 1841 to about 8,000 in 1921, Lindsay has erected 19 church buildings for six denominations, which Watson Kirkconnell, M.A., writing in the Watchman-Warder, considers an evidence of prodigality. His account of the various congregations and their pastors is interesting as being typical of Ontario life.

The pioneer church in Ops township was the Roman Catholic, with priests from Peterborough saying mass in farmhouses. First there came to Ops, Father Crowley of Cork who had come out in 1825 to shepherd the Robinson immigrants. His successor was Father Bennett, who toured as far as Coldwater and Penetanguishene, saying mass in Dennis Twohey's shanty in Ops. The next incumbent, Father O'Mearar, was badly injured by falling twenty-five feet from a church which he was building in Peterborough. Coming from Simcoe in 1840 to become resident priest for Ops, Father Fitzpatrick erected a log church and the first mass said on November 1, 1841.

Next came the Methodist Church. In 1832, Rev. Conrad Vandusen rode in from the Cavan circuit over the quagmire trail through the forest and preached to a tiny log cabin conventicle. Each year there came a new itinerant pastor until 1841 when Rev. John Sanderson, known as "Little Peculiarities," because he always smoothed quarrels over by saying "We all have our little peculiarities," contrived to stay for a two-year term, long enough to build a frame school and church, still standing. This was the first school and Protestant church in the settlement. Later used as a parsonage, it is now occupied by a cobbler.

About 1835 itinerant Presbyterian ministers began to visit the hamlet and preach in one log home or another, prominent among them being Mr. Moore, an Ulsterman. The number of Presbyterian families increased rapidly during the next decade and by 1845 they were able to build a church, a log cabin, as the result of a congregational bee. The first regular pastor came in 1853.

To Fly Round the World.

Announcement is made by the Dominion Air Board that Sir Ross Smith, the British air man who last summer flew from England to Australia, is contemplating a trip around the world in an airplane. The flier will start before winter, it is said.

A route with stopping places from British Columbia to Cape Breton has already been mapped out, and an alternative trail has been supplied which would bring the aviator into the United States, touching at St. Paul, Chicago, Pittsburgh and New York.

Sir Ross Smith, it is understood, is having a special ship built for his globe-circling journey.

The duration of the longest roll of thunder that has been accurately timed was forty-five seconds.

WINTERING OF PULLETS

If Possible Separate From All Hens and Cockerels.

Prepare Quarters Early and Transfer by November — Good Light and Ventilation Necessary — Winter Care of Pregnant Mares.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Many times the failure of securing a satisfactory winter egg yield is due to neglect of the pullets early in the fall. The ordinary pullets begin laying at from six to seven months of age, and many farmers get a few pullet eggs in October and November, followed by little or no production in December or early January. This frequently is due to a change in roosting quarters or being overcrowded and underfed in the poultry house.

Place In Winter Quarters Early.

To get the best results the pullets should be placed in winter quarters by November 1st. Before that time the henhouse should be thoroughly cleaned, the walls, ceiling, etc., brushed down, and all old cobwebs, etc., removed. Then give the house a good whitewashing, and if the floor is earth or sand at least four inches of it should be renewed.

Separate Pullets From Young Hens.

If at all possible, separate the pullets from the old hens and cockerels. In order to lay well, they should be fed all they will eat, particularly of ground grains and green foods, and should not be overcrowded. About twenty-five to thirty-five pullets is plenty for a pen twelve feet square; in fact in many cases twenty-five pullets in the pen will lay almost as many eggs as the thirty-five. Should you be fortunate in having too many pullets, or where you can make a selection, get the earliest and best matured ones into the pen first. If you have to crowd or sell some, get rid of the small, weak ones and those that are slow to develop.

Have the Pen Well Lighted and Ventilated.

The pen should be light and well ventilated. Have all the ventilators or openings on one side of the house and close together. Do not have an opening in one end of the house and another in the other end. These cause drafts which are very apt to produce colds and sickness. It usually takes a pullet at least three weeks to get over a cold, and she seldom lays while she has a cold. Keep the house dry, and use plenty of dry straw in which the birds can scratch for the feed.

Give Laying Hens Plenty of Food.

Remember a laying hen needs plenty of food, grit, and shell material. Also there should be a variety to the food; that is green food such as clover leaves, cabbage, or sprouted oats, or if none of these can be had some roots. She also needs some form of meat food—sour milk is the best, nut beef scrap, or other meat offal, if untainted, will answer. Usually about one-third of the grain should be ground or even up to one-half. The whole grain makes exercise in hunting for it in the straw. Always remember the pen should be clean, dry, and sweet.— R. W. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

Winter Care of Pregnant Mares.

The pregnant mare should be well fed and given regular exercise or light work. All food and water given should be of first-class quality. She should be given more grain than the non-pregnant mare, as she has the foetus to support. All possible care should be observed to avoid digestive derangements; hence, everything consumed should be of good quality, easily digested, fed in proportion to the amount of work performed and at regular intervals. In addition to hay and oats she should be given a few raw roots daily, and a feed of bran with a cupful of linseed meal at least twice weekly.

Work that requires excessive muscular or respiratory effort should be avoided, so also should plunging through deep snow, slipping, etc. All nervous excitement should be avoided; so also should sights which frighten her; also offensive odors; and operations.

The use of drugs should not be tolerated, except upon the advice of a veterinarian. If necessary to give a purgative, it is much safer to give raw linseed oil than aloes. Towards the end of pregnancy, still greater care should be observed; and, while daily exercise up to the very last is advisable, it should be given more carefully and less of it when she becomes somewhat clumsy on account of size and weight.

While it is better to allow her a box stall when in the stable at all times, it is practically necessary after about the tenth month of gestation; as the period of gestation is irregular and the foal may be born, without any well-marked premonitory symptoms, any time after ten months.

After the foal is born the mare should be given at least two weeks' idleness, and if she can be allowed to run idle until weaning time, it will be all the better for both herself and the foal.—J. H. Reed, V.S., O. A. College, Guelph.

The manufacturer's success is due largely to his ability to buy raw material at the lowest prices, to sell the finished products through an efficient distribution system, and to take advantage of more economic methods of production. He builds up a system to eliminate waste, inefficiency, and extravagance. Every farmer should do the same.

CALGARY IN THIRD PLACE.

Two Ontario Towns Ship Most Stock Now.

Where are now the glories of Pat Burns and Calgary? Two small places in one county in the effete East surpass the city beside the Bow as shipping points for live stock. First honors in the Dominion go to Ailsa Craig, and second honors to Thorndale. Calgary was second in 1918, with Thorndale third. Now the order is reversed and Calgary is third.

Now, will the metropolis of the foothills bow the knee to the despised eastern tank town? Ontario folk little realize that two Middlesex sidings ship more cattle, hogs and sheep than any towns or cities in all this broad land. It is not that the West is behind and coming strong; the West was almost up, but was forced from its proud place.

What of the live stock industry back of the little town which has displaced Calgary? Thorndale has stock raisers and stock buyers who work together. Not only is there grain and pasturage, and labor, there is also brainwork. The abattoirs want the kind of bacon hog, for example, that suits the British market. The buyers keep the raisers in touch with the varying fancies of the fancy trade. The farmers raise what is wanted. They supply Thorndale buyers with about 200 well-finished hogs each week, or over 10,000 yearly.

Visiting Thorndale recently, an expert found some of the finest dairy herds in the province. The eggs are not all in the one basket of beef cattle. One buyer shipped $2,000 worth of dressed turkeys from the little station in one week during the last Christmas season. About 10,000 head of cattle are shipped from Thorndale per year, being mostly the surplus of the dairy Shorthorn herds. The cows in R. R. Wheaton's herd of this type average over 9,500 pounds of milk each for the year. Thorndale farmers know how to breed stock of the sort that will sell. Middlesex soil and conditions do the rest. Calgary, etc., take notice.

Bishop Strachan.

Bishop Strachan was himself so much a father in spiritual and ecclesiastical matters in Upper Canada that it is difficult to think of him acknowledging an earlier Canadian as "my spiritual father," yet Rev. John Stuart, D.D., of Kingston, Ont., was so named by the distinguished cleric. From this statement it would seem obvious that the Stuart family goes back to the very beginnings of things in this country. Such an inference is substantiated by a reading of a little volume, "A Genealogical Study," by A. H. Young, just published at Kingston, Ontario.

John Stuart, called "the little gentleman" in spite of his six feet four inches, was the first missionary of the Church of England in Upper Canada, entering the wilds as a United Empire Loyalist with his fellow-patriots in 1785 and representing the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts until his death in 1811. Out of the Loyalist rectory in Kingston came three sons, one clergyman, two sheriffs and three jurists, and from them and two daughters a numerous and honorable family.

Perhaps the most distinguished descendant in the present generation is Col. Sir Campbell Stuart, managing director of the London Times. There are influential branches of this early family in Montreal and Hamilton. The service rendered the infant nation by Dr. Stuart included his bringing up Sir John Beverley Robinson, Bart.

Grape Juice.

Prohibition has given a wonderful boom to the grape-juice business. The manufacture of this kickless beverage has become within recent years a very important industry—so important, indeed, that the smallness of its early beginnings is curiously interesting.

Two men squeezing Concord grapes in a kitchen at Vineland, N.J., started it forty-two years ago. They put up a dozen bottles of the stuff, which was used for sacramental purposes by the village church. Other churches heard about this "unfermented wine," and were eager to buy it; so that before long the two men were bottling it in large quantities, and found it worth while to buy a hand press to squeeze the grapes. Soon there came to be a demand for grape juice as a beverage, and it grew so fast that machinery had to be installed. There were not enough grapes grown in the neighborhood of Vineland to supply the factory, and so it was removed to Westfield, Mass., where there were more to be had. Before long the factory was consuming several thousand tons of grapes annually.

Nowadays the product of whole vineyards is purchased under contract, and the picking is done under the eye of the factory's inspectors. After picking the grapes are not touched by hands. All the processes are performed by machinery.

Sheep In Quebec.

The sheep industry in the province of Quebec has had a steady growth, and there are now more than 1,000,000 sheep in the province. A considerable trade has been built up in the raising of lambs for the Montreal market. The organization of ram clubs throughout the province has had much to do with improving the quality of lambs.

Dahlias In Calgary.

Calgary gardeners have demonstrated that the pessimistic prophets of twenty years ago were lacking in vision in respect of certain flowers, such as dahlias. The first dahlia show has just been held in the city and nearly 2,000 blooms were entered. Some of these were from six to eight inches in diameter and the hues were particularly vivid and gorgeous.

FARMING WITH POWER

USE OF TRACTOR IS NOT A SINECURE.

Machinery Creates Problems That Do Not Bother the Man Who Uses Horse-drawn Implements— Necessary to Lay Out Fields So That High-class Job Can Be Done —Some of the Advantages Summarized.

Ploughing with tractors presents some problems that never bother the man who uses horse-drawn implements. It is necessary to lay out fields, so that a high-class job of ploughing can be done over the entire area with the minimum use of a horse-drawn plough in starting and finishing the work. The methods in general use are divided into two classes—those in which the ploughs are elevated and no ploughing is done across the ends, and those in which the ploughs are left in the ground continuously. In most cases better ploughing can be done when the ploughs are idle across the ends of the fields, and for this reason the methods of this class are more popular, but many farmers prefer the other methods, as they eliminate waste of time and labor.

Ploughmen using tractors wish to reduce to a minimum the time spent in running with ploughs out of the ground. While it is necessary to do some traveling while the ploughs are idle, care should be taken not to do too much of it, as it reduces the number of acres which can be ploughed in a day, making the tractor that much less efficient. Short turns, however, are awkward for most tractors, and where such turns are necessary the operator often has more or less difficulty in getting the outfit in the correct position for starting into the new furrow at the right point. Some tractors turn more easily in one direction than others, and this should be taken into consideration in laying out the fields.

The advantages of ploughing by the methods in which the ploughs are idle across the ends of the fields are that the short, awkward turns are eliminated, except in some cases at the beginning and ends of the lands, and usually less spaces will be left at the corners to be ploughed with horses. The advantage of the other methods are that little or no time is lost in traveling with the ploughs out of the ground, and that ordinarily the number of dead furrows and back furrows will be considerably less.

Ploughing With Tractors Presents Problems That Never Trouble Man Who Uses Horse-drawn Implements.

In using the first-named methods it is necessary to measure the lands in the center of the field accurately, leaving an equal area on all sides of the field in which to turn the outfit, and which can be ploughed last by running the tractor completely around the field several times. If one end of the field is unfenced the outfit can be pulled out into a road or lane, or an adjoining field, for turning. It may be preferable to plough up to the fence on the two sides as the body of the field is being ploughed, and leave the headland only across the end of the field which is fenced. The width of the headland will depend largely on the turning radius of the tractor. With usually handled outfits it is not necessary to leave more than 15 or 20 feet.

If the field is to be finished up in the best manner, with no irregular, unploughed strips between the land or at the edges, it is essential that care be taken to have the headland of the same width clear around the field, to have the distances measured exactly when starting new lands, and to have the first furrows as nearly straight as possible. A little extra time taken in measuring off the necessary distances and setting plenty of stakes for guidance will nearly always be more than returned in saving time at the finish. If the tractor pulls three or more ploughs, cutting a total width of three or more feet, some effort should be made to have the width of the headlands an exact multiple of the total width of the plough, so that the last strip across the field will exactly cut out the land or field to the fence. This will do away with the necessity of making a trip across the field, probably over the ploughed ground, to turn a narrow strip which has been left unploughed.

Ration for Little Calves.

An excellent grain ration for little calves is three parts of oats, one part of corn and one part of oil meal. Keep the grain fresh. Do not spill milk in it or leave it in the manger. Let the calves have free access to fresh and clean water, and also to salt. The common idea that calves will drink too much water is a mistake. During the first four months the calves should not, however, eat too much grain.

SELLING OLD HOMES.

Soap Manufacturer Takes Over an Ancestral Seat.

Another celebrated ancestral country seat in England has passed out of the family to which it has belonged for four hundred years through the sale by Lord Willoughby de Broke of his beautiful place in Warwickshire, England, known as Compton Verney, to Joseph Watson, the multi-millionaire, head of the soap-making concern of J. Watson & Sons of Leeds. Joseph Watson has recently gone on to the turf, and won the Grand Prix of Paris, while another of his horses came in third at the Derby this year.

Compton Verney contains many relics of Queen Elizabeth, as well as some superb Romneys, while the gardens, which are a feature of the place, were laid out by the celebrated landscape artist "Capability" Brown. They, together with the park, embrace considerably over 5,000 acres.

Lord Willoughby de Broke is the nineteenth holder of a barony which was bestowed by Henry VII. upon Sir Robert Willoughby in recognition of his services at the battle of Bosworth, which had brought that monarch to the throne. This first Lord Willoughby de Broke (the latter name must be pronounced as if written Brook) was also the first British soldier to receive the title of Field Marshal, which was accorded to him on the occasion of his being appointed to the command of the English troops sent across the Channel to aid the sovereign Dukes of Brittanny in their war against the French crown.

The barony fell into abeyance on the death of the second peer, among the latter's granddaughters, and was only revived in 1694, in the person of Sir Richard Verney, whose mother could show a descent in the female line from one of the granddaughters of the second lord. Since then the barony has always been in the house of Verney.

Lord Willoughy de Broke excels in cricket, and was for many years master of the Warwickshire hounds, and renowned for the extraordinary picturesqueness of his language quite the reverse of conciliatory. He also in his younger days shone as a steeplechaser, and was with Capt. "Bay" Middleton when the latter broke his neck at Kineton, near Compton Verney. Lord Willoughby de Broke lost his younger son in India, through drowning, some years ago, and was bereaved of his only daughter under tragic circumstances. He has one remaining son, who was badly wounded in the fighting around Amiens in the late war as a captain of the Seventeenth Lancers, and in the event of his death the barony would fall once more into abeyance between the present peer's two married sisters.

CIDER.

Apple Juice Is Becoming Canada's Popular Beverage.

Apple cider is an old-fashioned beverage, but the people of Canada never knew so many things about it as they are learning since the country "went dry." It was made, in the old days, in water-power mills. The cider mill was a local mill to which farmers hauled cider apples—often culls and natural fruit — in dump-carts. The cider barrel was a hogs-head with a great wooden bung, around which a piece of burlap was often wrapped. Farmers used to say that Russet cider — meaning cider from Russet apples — was the best there was.

But what old-timers knew about apple cider was as nothing to the kind of knowledge which the nation is now rapidly acquiring. The consumer in large cities is learning that apple juice is a wonderful beverage, and demanding it, and overnight a manufacturing industry of large proportions has developed.

The seat of twentieth century cider-making is not, as it was twenty-five years ago, the country water-power mill. It is a city industrial plant, to which apples for cider are often shipped long distance.

This city plants makes cider from time to time through the winter, drawing on stored apples and supplying dealers with a constant fresh supply. In the old-time cider mill, cider was usually only made for a short period in the autumn.

Sweet cider never has been obtainable for much more than a few weeks after the apple harvest. Then the cider has grown hard; it is on its way to vinegar. So there is much feverish experimenting with processes to keep cider sweet. The value of such processes, in this prohibition age when new beverage habits are being formed, is obvious.

A few years ago cider apples were always obtained for a few cents a bushel. But when, in early winter this year, producers on whose hands apples had become accidentally frozen, turned them into cider, the value of the liquid obtained from a barrel of apples was in some instances, as much as thirty shillings.

As only would be expected, matters connected with apple cider are "getting into court." In British Columbia, adjoining the state of Washington and equally dry, a co-operative farmers concern was accused by the Provincial Government of supplying a dealer with cider containing 10 per cent. alcohol.

Producing evidence that as shipped the particular consignment contained about two per cent., and suggesting that afterward somebody had put "something" into the cider, the growers called as an expert witness the manager of a vinegar factory.

This expert testified that it was chemically impossible for the cider to have developed the alcoholic content stated, without tampering. He said that the sugar content of Okanagan Valley apples, varying with the season and the particular variety of apple, ran from 7 to 14 per cent. The alcoholic properties of cider, he explained, depended entirely on the sugar content, the heaviest alcoholic proportion possible being 50 per cent. of the sugar. The maximum development of alcohol in pure cider of Okanagan apples was therefore 7 per cent., so the growers were found innocent.

Obviously, cider is a coming beverage on this continent. Hand or power mills for making it at home are being extensively bought. There is a disposition in some quarters to discard the old-fashioned name, cider is shrouded in a definite, peculiar atmosphere all its own — an atmosphere which some fastidious ones are not taken with.

Kill Squirrel-Tail Grass.

Squirrel-tail grass or wild barley is a bad weed. It helps spread the rust of wheat and oats which has been found on it every year for 30 years in Iowa, and it is injurious to stock, and especially horses. The awns pierce the mucuous membrane of the mouth causing irritation and finally ulceration of the jawbones and teeth. The wild barley can be exterminated by keeping it from producing seed. This is simple enough, but it is often difficult to do on land that cannot be ploughed or mowed.

ABLE TO DO HER WORK

After Long Suffering Mrs. Peasey Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Toronto, Ont.—"I suffered with irregular menstruation, was weak and run down, could not eat and had headaches. The worst symptoms were dragging down pains, so bad I sometimes thought I would go crazy and I seemed to be smothering. I was in this condition for two or three years and could not seem to work. I tried all kinds of medicines and had been treated by physicians but received no benefit. I found one of your booklets and felt inclined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I received the best results from it and now I keep house and go out to work and am like a new woman. I have recommended your Vegetable Compound to my friends and if these facts will help some poor woman use them as you please."—Mrs. J. F. Peasey, 387 King St., Toronto, Ontario.

If you are one of these women do not suffer for four or five years as Mrs. Peasey did, but profit by her experience and be restored to health.

Premier Meighen visits Napanee.

On Thursday afternoon last Napanee Armouries were crowded to hear Premier Arthur Meighen speak upon the political issues of the day. Premier Meighen was escorted to the armouries by a procession, headed by the Napanee band. The members of the County Council, and most of the members of the Town Council were also among those welcoming him to Napanee. At the armouries the large audience gave splendid attention to the speakers.

The Warden's Supper.

On Friday evening Mr. Samuel Miller, Warden of the County, gave a banquet at the Paisley House to mark the conclusion of his term of office as Warden of the County of Lennox and Addington. About one hundred guests were present including the County Council, the Town Council, the county officials, a number of ex-wardens, and personal friends of Mr. Miller, half a dozen coming from Amherst Island specially for the occasion. A splendid supper was served, followed by some short speeches and a song fest. A combined toast list and song sheet was given each guest. Mr. W. G. Wilson, County Clerk, very ably performed the duties of Master of Ceremonies, while Mr. W. J. Shannon, County Treasurer, led the singing. Mr. Miller, the host, was highly complimented on the success of the evening's entertainment.

Bazaar.

The annual Bazaar of the Church Women's Guild of St. Mary Magdalene Church will be held in the town hall, Thursday afternoon, December 1st. This bazaar has earned a well merited reputation for the originality and usefulness of the articles offered for sale and this year the choice is even more varied than formerly, as the ladies have made a special effort to suit every taste and every purse. The usual fine display of table linen, luncheon sets, towels, pillow cases, etc., in hand work, will be found; special novelties in all kinds of aprons for kitchen, garden, sewing or housecleaning; bridge table covers, balsam pillows and a tempting assortment of home cooked food and home-made candy. Baby's department has been developed extensively and there are knitted articles, children's dresses, and most fascinating toys, offered for your approval. The arts and craft's department has broadened also, and prospective Christmas buyers will find very many useful and most moderately priced gifts, the majority being hand painted. Shoe trees, coat hangers, bridge scores, numbers and pencils, candle sticks, trays, and many other delightful novelties too numerous to mention. An At Home will be held in the town hall in the evening, with an informal programme including Mr. Jack Elder, of Kingston, a second Harry Lauder, who will sing Scotch songs in costume. Silver collection.

Premier Meighen's explanation of the Riordan scandel, for it is nothing less than a scandel, is very lame. A company which paid its stockholders big dividends, and paid the U. S. Government large sums in taxes is allowed to give the Canadian Government I. O. U's, and the government admits that there are other large companies in the same category, though it refuses to give the names. At the same time all the small tax payers were ordered to pay their taxes forthwith and did so. It is a sorry mess, look at it any way you will. It is enough and more to damn any government. The Meighen government's pandering to the Riordon Company—and to others which it refuses to mention—has aroused the country to a sense of shame and indignation which will find an emphatic expression at the polls on Dec. 6th.

PERISHED IN LIFEBOAT

Two Bodies Were Found in an Open Craft.

Steamer "City of New York" Went Down Opposite Kingston In Gale on Lake Ontario, and No Hope Is Entertained That Any Member of the Crew Escaped—Bodies of the Captain and His Child Are Still Missing.

KINGSTON, Ont., Nov. 28.—Cast adrift in a lifeboat upon the turbulent waters of Lake Ontario when their ship, the "City of New York," foundered during a terrific gale which swept down the lake Thursday morning last, the bodies of four members of the ill-fated crew and Mrs. Randall, wife of the captain, were found on Friday night huddled in the bottom of their frail refuge frozen to death.

The discovery was made by the crew of the "Isabella H." a sister lake freighter, about 10 miles southwest of Stoney Point. Some distance away floated another lifeboat, empty and with oars gone. Later, the third and last lifeboat was located. It was drifting upside down.

No hope whatever is held out that any of the crew of the "City of New York," who numbered eight, including the captain's family, have survived the disaster.

The body of the captain and owner, Harry Randall, has not been recovered, neither has that of his child.

It is believed that Captain Randall and his son, together with the remaining two members of the crew, put off in the second lifeboat and were caught in the suction caused by the sinking of the ship and overturned.

Among the crew of the "City of New York" were Captain Harry Randall, his wife and two children, one aged 12 years and the other a year old, of Seeley's Bay; Mate Wesley Warren, Engineer R. H. Dorey and Deckhand I. J. Dorey, of Seeley's Bay; and Fireman Joseph G. Gallagher and Deckhand Frank Gallagher, of Kingston.

The elder Dorey has been sailing on the lakes practically all his life, but it was the first trip the younger Dorey had ever made. He went on the boat when it left Kingston two weeks ago to help his brother out for the remainder of the season.

The "City of New York" was bound for Trenton when she foundered, with a cargo of sulphur and phosphate. Although a vessel of 500 tons capacity, she carried only 350 tons of cargo. She was 57 years old, of wooden construction, and was bought in Toronto this last spring by Captain Randall.

Just where the "City of New York" foundered must remain a matter of conjecture; but it is generally conceded that the time was Thursday morning, and the hour between 6 and 7 o'clock. If this is so, then Captain Osborne, of the Isabella H.," who later was destined to discover the lifeboat of death afloat upon the lake, virtually witnessed the grim tragedy, though he did not know it at the time. The last act in the drama of the staunch, old freighter was enacted near Main Ducks Island, and was set out about 40 miles in the lake from the Port of Kingston.

"We ran into a bad sleet gale early Thursday morning," Captain Vincent said, "and hove to behind the island for shelter. It was pitch dark, but shortly after we were riding at anchor we saw the lights of the "City of New York" flash past. We followed them with our eyes for some time, and then they suddenly disappeared. We did not pay any attention to it at the time. We thought that Randall had changed his course, and let it go at that."

Four of the five bodies found in the yawl have been identified by Captain John Randall, father of the master of the ill-fated steamer. Those identified are: Mrs. Harry Randall, of Seeley's Bay, 31 years of age; Mate Wesley Warren, Seeley's Bay, aged 30; Engineer Harry Dorey, Kingston, aged 31; Deckhand Gilbert Dorey, Kingston, aged 17. The fifth body has not yet been identied, but it is described as that of a fair-haired boy, about 16 years of age. Mate Warren and the Dorey brothers were unmarried. The father of the two latter, Matthew Dorey, of Kingston, has been a sailor nearly all his life, but was employed this summer at Hamilton. The Doreys were with Captain Randall for about a month. The younger, who had a land job this summer, when laid off, said he would go sailing to earn some money for Christmas. Captain Harry Randall was about 33 years of age. He is survived by his parents and a four-year-old son by a previous marriage.

WAS SHOT BY LOVER.

Tragedy Took Place In Theatre at Hamilton.

HAMILTON, Nov. 28.—Miss Cecile Bartley, the young vaudeville actress of Chicago, with the "Under the Apple Tree Company," who was shot three times late on Friday afternoon, in the Lyric Theatre, spent a restful night at the General Hospital, and her condition to-day was reported to be fair. She is not, however, yet out of danger. Doctors hold out a chance for her recovery if complications do not set in.

The crown authorities, together with Chief Coroner Rennie, have decided not to hold an inquest. They expressed themselves as being satisfied with the statements of the wounded girl and another member of the act, named Miss Helen Campbell, that Jack Grubb, stage carpenter of the act, aged 45, the flouted admirer of Miss Bartley, did the shooting, and also ended his own life.

With Grubb dead, Coroner Rennie said he failed to see what public interest could be served by holding an inquest. Statements had been obtained from all the members of the act, and an inquest was found to be unnecessary.

The remains of Jack Grubb were sent to Baltimore for interment. Local stage mechanics had charge of the funeral arrangements.

BEATTY IN CANADA.

Famous British Admiral Received With Enthusiasm.

Ottawa, Nov. 28. — Admiral Earl Beatty scored his first Canadian triumph when he took the capital by storm Saturday morning. In sharp winter weather and driving snow, thousands of people jammed the Central Station and the streets leading to the City Hall to catch a glimpse of the famous sea fighter and to cheer.

The drive from the station to the City Hall took on all the appearance of a triumphal progress comparable only to the welcome accorded the Prince of Wales during his visit here last year.

Entering the City Council chamber the visitor was greeted by Mayor Plant and by the members of the Board of Control and City Council. In a short address His Worship welcomed Earl Beatty officially to Ottawa on behalf of the corporation, assuring him of the esteem in which he was held in Canada. Earl Beatty signed the visitors' book and received several addresses from patriotic and public bodies. These addresses were not read.

MONTREAL, Nov. 28.—Earl Beatty, admiral of the fleet and hero of Jutland, spent a day packed with thirteen hours of continuous events from the moment of his arrival here at 9.45 Sunday morning, to the minute of his departure for Toronto, at 11 p.m.

Debonair, bluff and smiling, the admiral arrived to find a crowd of five or six hundred people, who had braved a bitterly cold morning to greet him at the railway station. He was met by Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, Minister of Marine, and a notable gathering, including representatives of the Government, the civic authorities, the naval, air and land forces, most of the latter being officers who had served overseas. He was driven to the Windsor Hotel, where he was the recipient of another warm greeting by another large gathering. At eleven his lordship attended divine service at the cathedral, where the sermon was preached by Bishop Farthing.

The first Sunday luncheon ever held here by the Canadian Club was later addressed by Admiral Beatty, who reiterated his statement made at Ottawa on Saturday to the effect that "if the conference at Washington were to close its doors to-morrow, it would have accomplished a great task. The navies of the world are going to be limited, but it is recognied that the British navy does not go out of the picture."

It is estimated that fully 1,700 persons attended the luncheon. Lord Shaughnessy presented the admiral in a brief speech.

MAIL BAG WAS ROBBED.

Theft of $10,000 Took Place En Route to Toronto.

TORONTO, Nov. 28. — It became known on Saturday night that a sack containing registered mail, made up of cash and securities, said to be valued at approximately $10,000, and intended for North Bay and other northern points, and the head office of the Imperial Bank here, had disappeared from the mail car of the southbound T. & N. O. train at Porquois Junction, on Nov. 19. Federal investigators and postal authorities, who are investigating the case, are of the opinion that the mail was stolen. Postal officials, when questioned, refused to discuss the matter, but one tacitly admitted that a theft of large dimension had occurred when he stated that the affair spoken of was in the hands of the Federal authorities. General Superintendent Ross and Postal Inspector Sutherland could not be reached, the inspector having been out of town for days past.

The mail bag in question was despatched from Timmins on the southbound T. & N. O. train on Nov. 15. On the train's arrival at North Bay, an examination of the registered mail disclosed the fact that several packages were missing. These were contained in a sack that was labelled for North Bay and Toronto. It is the belief of those connected with the affair that the sack was stolen during the transfer of mail from the T. & N. O. train to the southbound Transcontinental at Porquois Junction.

Owing to a derailment on the T. & N. O. on Nov. 14, the mail was not shipped in the usual way or in the regular mail car.

Officials who are not so reticent are of the opinion that the amount of the theft will not total the aggregate named.

Seek Lessons In Canada.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—A special Pullman train left the Grand Central terminal in New York at 7.45 o'clock Sunday freighted with the most important economic mission that ever sped towards the Canadian border.

Its passengers were sixty members of Congress, the most distinguished delegation that has ever gone out of Washington into a foreign country.

Their purpose is to study the Canadian sales tax system, with a view to its application in the United States.

The noteworthy array of lawmakers, which set forth for Canada Saturday night from Washington and New York, has been commissioned, in a way, by American public opinion, to learn if our tax system cannot be simplified as the tax system of Canada has been.

Toll of Deaths In Movie Fire.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 28.—Three are known to be dead, and more than eighty injured, several seriously, in the fire which broke out in the Rialto Theatre, in College street, opposite Hotel Taft, at 8 o'clock Sunday night. Panic among the 900 in the audience followed an explosion in the film projection room, where the fire started, and many were trampled. The police had seen thirty-two to hospitals.

Burning incense on the stage in connection with a motion picture firm is believed to have started the blaze.

Prison Theatre Burned.

GUELPH, Nov. 28.—With "trusties" rendering gallant assistance, both on guard and in fighting the blaze, a spectacular effort to save the Provincial Reformatory was made early Saturday. The theatre was totally destroyed and to-day is a mass of ruins, with only the walls left standing, but the spread of the fire was prevented.

SIR D. CAMERON DEAD.

Manitoba Loses Its Former Lieutenant-Governor.

TORONTO, Nov. 28. — Following a brief illness, the death occurred at the Toronto General Hospital Sunday night of his honor Lieut.-Col. Sir Douglas C. Cameron, K.C.M.G., former Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba. He died at 7.55 p.m.

The late Sir Douglas, whose home was in Vancouver, B.C., was taken ill a fortnight ago in Toronto, and for several days was confined to bed in the Queen's Hotel. At the Toronto General Hospital, to which he was subsequently removed, an operation was performed for mastoil. A complication of pneumonia set in, and Sir Douglas succumbed from the combined effects. Lady Cameron is hastening to Toronto from Vancouver.

Sir Douglas was Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba from 1911 until 1916, when he was succeeded by the present official, Sir J. A. M. Aikins. Born in Prescott county, Ont., in 1854, he was educated at high school at Vankleek Hill, and was engaged in farming in Ontario from 1871 until 1880; he went West to Winnipeg in 1880, and was engaged in various occupations until 1883, when he entered the lumber business under the firm name of Cameron & Co. His business underwent several name changes until about 1892, when it emerged as the Rat Portage Lumber Co., of which he remained president until his death. He was also president of the Maple Leaf Milling Co., and identified with numerous other business enterprises. His timber holdings in British Columbia were very large.

In 1902 he was elected to the Ontario Legislature for Fort William, and Lake of the Woods, but was defeated in 1905 and 1908. In 1908 he was unsuccessful candidate for the House of Commons. He was Councillor, and subsequently Mayor of Rat Portage. He was appointed K.C.M.G. Dec. 31, 1913, and honorary lieutenant-colonel of the 79th Highlanders in 1910. Besides his widow, two sons and one daughter survive. He was a Liberal in politics, and a Presbyterian in religion.

Five Men Rescued by Steamer.

HALIFAX, N.S., Nov. 28. — The British steamer Welshman rescued the captain and four members of the crew of the schooner Stanley Joseph, of St. John's, Newfoundland, in latitude 46.08 north, longitude 53.02 west, according to a message received by the Inteligence Department of the Canadian Naval Service here. The Stanley Joseph had been stripped of sails and rudder in a heavy northwest gale, the message said. Before being abandoned she was set on fire, but when last seen the fire was apparently dying out and the wreck seemed likely to remain afloat as a menace to navigation. After affecting the rescue, with much difficulty, the Welshman was unable to take her lifeboat aboard again, and had to cast it adrift because of heavy seas.

Killed by an Auto.

GODERICH, Nov. 28. — Saturday night, about 8.15, Leonard McManus, aged 18, son of James McManus, of the McManus Dairy, Colborne township, who, with his sister, was crossing the street on the square, to attend the picture show, was struck and fatally injured by a car driven by his brother, Wilmer.

Children Perish In Flames.

MONTREAL, Nov. 28.—Two children were burned to death, one man was severely cut about the head and hand and a woman suffered serious burns about the head and body, while damage estimated at $20,000 was incurred in a fire of undetermined origin that broke out in a block of houses on Nine avenue, Rosemount Ward, this city, early Sunday morning. The dead are: Elsie and Walter Langley, aged six and four years, respectively, whose bodies were found in the afternoon, burned almost beyond recognition.

The injured are: Henry Langley, 65, grandfather, and Mrs. Joseph Langley, 35, mother of the dead children.

Nine houses, with their contents were completely destroyed, and the same number of families are rendered homeless. The men were accommodated with cots at the neighboring fire and police stations, while the women and children were given hospitality by neighbors.

Women Farmers.

All through Western Canada are to be found women owning and running farms for themselves, and making them pay. A recent example is that of May Hazlet, an English girl, who has lived alone on a farm in the Touchwood Hills for the past four years, looking after her stock and cultivating her land. The farm was originally her brother's homestead, at which time Miss Hazlet was a stenographer. He was killed at Vimy Ridge and neighbors advised his sister to sell the farm. She, however, decided to become a farmerette, although she had never previously lived in the country. She now owns several head of horses, a fine bunch of cattle, and more than 100 acres under cultivation.

What Is To Be Canada's Destiny?

Shall it be that through the destruction of the Tariff as proposed by both Crerar and King, the development of Canada is to come under the domination of the United States, to be followed by gradual financial domination and as a consequence, political domination?

—OR—

Is Canada's destiny to be that of a great free nation within the British Empire group of Nations, developing her boundless resources of mine, river, water power, forest, and cultivating her millions upon millions of acres of arable land? Is her development to surpass that of any other nation?

Shall her manufacturing industries develop her minerals and raw materials into implements and goods for the benefit and comfort of her people and for foreign trade?

Shall she become a self-contained nation within the Empire, her great railways interchanging, the products of factory and farm among her own people, and her ships sailing every sea?

Shall she maintain her integrity within the Empire and protect her farms and factories against unfair competition from foreign countries?

IF THIS IS TO BE CANADA'S DESTINY THEN CANADA NEEDS MEIGHEN.

On December 6th, Canada should once again protect her farms, her factories and her workmen against the unsound theory of Free Trade, and should hold fast to her reasonable Protective Tariff, her national entity and her British connection.

On December 6th Canada should declare with no uncertain voice that she will not tolerate the false trade theories of visionaries and group leaders which tend toward her economic destruction, toward the separation of her people and the weakening of the ties that bind Canada to the British Empire.

On December 6th Canada should demonstrate unmistakably to the outside world her fixed determination to keep Canada for the Canadians.

On December 6th Canada's destiny is at stake.

"I knew I couldn't be mistaken in the shape of you," he cried, advancing with outstretched hand. "You've got the breadth of a dockhand in your shoulders and the trimness of a prize fighter in your waist."

They shook hands. "I fear I am trespassing," said Barnes. His glance went over his shoulder as he spoke. The man with the spade had been swallowed up by the earth! He could not have vanished more quickly in any other way. Off among the trees were intermittent flashes of blue and white.

"I am quite sure you are," said O'Dowd promptly but without a trace of unfriendliness in his manner. "Bedad, loving him as I do, I can't help saying that Curtis is a bally old crank. Mind ye, I'd say it to his face—I often do, for the matter of that. Of course," he went on seriously, "he is a sick man, poor devil. You see I've known him for a dozen years and more, and he likes me, though God knows why, unless it may be that I once did his son a good turn in London."

"Sufficient excuse for reparation, I should say," smiled Barnes.

"I introduced the lad to me only sister," said O'Dowd, "and she kept him happy for the next ten years. No doubt I also provided Mr. Curtis with three grandchildren he might never have had but for my graciousness." A look of distress came into his merry eyes. "By Jove, I'd like nothing better than to ask you in to have a dish of tea—it's teatime, I'm sure—but I'd no more think of doing it than I'd consider cutting off me head. He doesn't like strangers. He—"

"My dear fellow, don't distress yourself," cried Barnes heartily. "There isn't the least reason in the world why—"

"You see, the poor old chap asks us up here once or twice a year—that is to say, De Soto and me—to keep his sister from filling the house up with men he can't endure. So long as we occupy the only available rooms, he argues, she can't stuff them full of objectionables. Twice a year she comes for a month, in the late fall and early spring."

"Why does he continue to live in this out-of-the-world spot? He is an old man, I take it, and ill."

"You wouldn't be wondering if you knew the man," said O'Dowd. "He is a scholar, a dreamer, a sufferer. He's not a very old man at that. Not more than sixty-five."

"He certainly has a fanciful streak in him, building a place like that," said Barnes, looking not at the house but into the thicket above. There was no sign of the blue and white and the spun gold that still defied exclusion from his mind's eye. He had not recovered from the thrall into which the vision of loveliness plunged him. He was still a trifle dazed and distraught.

"Right you are," agreed O'Dowd; "the queerest streak in the world. It's his notion of simplicity."

"Green Fancy. Is that the name he gave the place or does it spring from—"

"'Twas christened by me own sister, Mr. Barnes, the first time she was here, two years ago. I'll walk with you to the fence beyond if you've no objections," said O'Dowd genially, and linked his arm through that of Barnes.

The latter was at once subtly aware of the fact that he was being deliberately conducted from the grounds. Moreover, he was now convinced that O'Dowd had been close upon his heels from the instant he entered them. There was something uncanny in the feeling that possessed him. Such espionage as this signified something deep and imperative in the presence not only of O'Dowd but the jack-in-the-box gardener a few minutes earlier.

His mind was still full of the lovely stranger about whom O'Dowd had so manifestly lied over the telephone.

"I must ask you to apologize to the young lady on whom I blundered a few moments ago, Mr. O'Dowd. She must have been startled. Pray convey to her my solicitude and excuses."

"Consider it done, my dear sir," said the Irishman. "Our most charming and seductive guest," he went on. "[illegible] of the two of you, I'll stake me head you were startled the most. Coming suddenly upon such rare loveliness is almost equivalent to being struck by a bolt of lightning. More than one painter of portraits has said that she is the most beautiful woman in the world. Mayhap you have heard of her. She is Miss Cameron of New Orleans, a friend of Mrs. Van Dyke. We have quite an enchanting house party, Mr. Barnes, if you consider no more than the feminine side of it. By the way, have you heard when the coroner is to hold his inquests?"

"Nothing definite. He may wait a week," said Barnes.

"I suppose you'll stick around until it's over," ventured O'Dowd. Barnes thought he detected a slight harshness in his voice.

"I have quite made up my mind to stay until the mystery is entirely cleared up," he said. "The case is so interesting that I don't want to miss a shred of it."

"I don't blame ye," said O'Dowd heartily. "I'd like nothing better meself than to mix up in it. The next time you plan to pay us a visit, telephone in advance. I may be able to persuade my host that you're a decent, law-abiding, educated gentleman, and he'll consent to receive you at Green Fancy. Good day to ye," and he shook hands with the departing trespasser.

"Takin' a walk?" was the landlord's greeting as Barnes mounted the tavern steps at dusk.

"Going over the grounds of last night's affair," responded Barnes, pausing

As he entered the door he was acutely aware of an intense stare leveled at him from behind by the landlord of Hart's Tavern. Half way up the stairway he stopped short and with difficulty repressed the exclamation that rose to his lips.

He had recalled a significant incident of the night before. Almost immediately after the departure of Roon and Paul from the Tavern Putnam Jones had made his way to the telephone behind the desk and had called a number in a loud, brisk voice, but the subsequent conversation was carried on in subdued tones, attended by haste and occasional furtive glances in the direction of the taproom.

Upon reaching his room Barnes permitted the suppressed emotion to escape his lips in the shape of a soft whistle, which if it could have been translated into words would have said: "By Gad, why haven't I thought of it before? He sent out the warning that Roon and Paul were on the way! And I'd like to bet my last dollar that someone at Green Fancy had the other end of the wire."

Mr. Rushcroft was giving Hamlet's address to the players, in the taproom when Barnes came downstairs at nine o'clock.

A small, dark man who sat alone at a table in the corner caught Barnes' eye and smiled almost mournfully. He was undoubtedly a stranger; his action was meant to convey to Barnes the information that he too was from a distant and sophisticated community and that a bond of sympathy existed between them.

Putnam Jones spoke suddenly at Barnes' shoulder. He started involuntarily. The man was beginning to get on his nerves. He seemed to be dogging his footsteps with ceaseless persistency.

"That feller over there in the corner," said Jones softly, "is a book agent from your town. He sold me a set of Dickens when he was here last time, about six weeks ago. A year's subscription to two magazines throwed in. By gosh, these book agents are slick ones."

"He's a shrewd-looking chap," commented Barnes.

"Says he won't be satisfied till he's made this section of the country the most cultured, refined spot in the United States," said Jones dolefully. "Excuse me. There goes the telephone. Maybe its news from the sheriff."

With the spasmodic tinkling of the telephone bell the book agent arose and made his way to the little office. Barnes glanced over his shoulder a moment later and saw him studying the register. The poise of his sleek head, however, suggested a listening attitude. Putnam Jones, not four feet away, was speaking into the telephone receiver. As the receiver was restored to its hook Barnes turned again. Jones and the book agent were examining the register, their heads almost meeting from opposite sides of the desk.

The latter straightened up, stretched his arms, yawned, and announced in a loud tone that he guessed he'd stop out and get a bit of fresh air before turning in.

"Any news?" inquired Barnes, approaching the desk after the door had closed behind the book agent.

"It wasn't the sheriff," replied Jones shortly, and immediately resumed his interrupted discourse on books and book agents. Ten minutes elapsed before the landlord's garrulity was checked by the sound of an automobile coming to a stop in front of the house. Barnes turned expectantly toward the door. Almost immediately the car started again, with a loud shifting of gears, and a moment later the door opened to admit, not a fresh arrival but the little book agent.

"Party trying to make Hornville tonight," he announced casually. "Well, good night. See you in the morning."

Barnes was not in a position to doubt the fellow's word, for the car unmistakably had gone on toward Hornville. He waited a few minutes after the man disappeared up the narrow stairway, and then proceeded to test his powers of divination. He was as sure as he could be sure of anything that had not actually come to pass that in a short time the automobile would again pass the tavern, but this time from the direction of Hornville.

Lighting a cigarette he strolled outside. He had barely time to take a position at the darkened end of the porch before the sounds of an approaching machine came to his ears. A second or two later the lights swung around the bend in the road a quarter of a mile above Hart's Tavern, and down came the car at a high rate of speed. It dashed past the tavern with a great roar and rattle and shot off into the darkness beyond. As it rushed through the dim circle of light in front of the tavern Barnes succeeded in obtaining a brief but convincing view of the car. That glance was enough, however. He would have been willing to go before a jury and swear that it was the same car that had deposited him at Hart's Tavern the day before.

Having guessed correctly in the one instance he allowed himself another and even bolder guess—the little book agent had either received a message from or delivered one to the occupant or driver of the car from Green Fancy.

CHAPTER VIII.

A Note, Some Fancies and an Expedition in Quest of Facts.

He started upstairs, his mind full of the events and conjectures of the day. As he entered the room his eyes fell upon a white envelope at his feet. It had been slipped under the door since he left the room an hour before.

"Terse reminder from the prudent Mr. Jones! His bill for the day! He picked it up, glanced at the inscription, and at once altered his opinion. His full name was there in the handwriting of a woman. For a moment he was puzzled; then he thought of Miss Thackeray. A note of thanks, no doubt, unpleasantly fulsome! Vaguely annoyed, he ripped open the envelope and read:

"In case I do not have the opportunity to speak with you tonight, this is to let you know that the little man who says he is a book agent was in your room for three-quarters of an hour while you were away this afternoon. You'd better see if anything is missing. M. T."

He made a hasty but careful examination of his effects. There was not the slightest evidence that his pack had been opened or even disturbed. If the little book agent spent three-quarters of an hour in the room he managed most effectually to cover up all traces of his visit.

Barnes did not go to sleep until long after midnight. He now regarded himself as definitely committed to a combination of sinister and piquant enterprises, not the least of which was to know about the mysterious young woman at Green Fancy.

The next day he, with other lodgers in the Tavern, was put through an examination by the police and county officials from St. Elizabeth, and notified that, while he was not under suspicion or surveillance, it would be necessary for him to remain in the "bailiwick" until detectives, already on the way, were satisfied that he possessed no knowledge that would be useful to them in clearing up what had now assumed the dignity of a "national problem."

O'Dowd rode down from Green Fancy and created quite a sensation among the officials by announcing that they had a perfect right to extend their search for clues to all parts of his estate, and that he was deeply interested in the outcome of their investigations.

The sheriff said he would like to "run over the ground a bit" that very afternoon if it was agreeable to Mr. O'Dowd.

O'Dowd stayed to dinner. (Dinner was served in the middle of the day at Hart's Tavern.) He made a great impression upon Lyndon Rushcroft, who, with his daughter, joined the two men. Indeed, the palavering Irishman extended himself in the effort to make himself agreeable. He was vastly interested in the stage, he declared. As a matter of fact he had been told a thousand times that he ought to go on the stage. . . .

The little book agent came in while they were at table. He sat down in a corner of the dining room and busied himself with his subscription lists while waiting for the meal to be served. He was still poring over them, frowning intently, when Barnes and the others left the room.

Barnes walked out beside Miss Thackeray.

"The tailor-made gown is an improvement," he said to her. He was thinking that she was a very pretty girl, after all.

"The frock usually makes the woman," she said slowly, "but not always the lady."

He thought of that remark more than once during the course of an afternoon spent in the woods about Green Fancy.

O'Dowd virtually commanded the expedition. It was he who thought of everything. First of all, he led the party to the corner of the estate nearest the point where Paul was shot from his horse. Sitting in his saddle he called the attention of the other riders to what appeared to be a most significant fact in connection with the killing of this man.

"From what I hear the man Paul was shot through the lungs, directly from in front. The bullet went straight through his body. He was riding very rapidly down the road. When he came to a point not far above the crossroads he was fired upon. It is safe to assume that he was looking intently ahead, trying to make out the crossing. He was not shot from the side of the road, gentlemen, but from the middle of it. The bullet came from a point almost directly in front of him, and not from Mr. Curtis' property here to the left or Mr. Conley's on the right. The chances are that Paul did not accompany Roon to the meeting place up the road. He remained near the horses. That's how he managed to get away so quickly. It remained for the man at the crossroads to settle with him. But we're wasting time with all this twaddle of mine. Let us be moving. There is one point on which we must all agree. The deadliest marksman in the world fired those shots. No bungling on that score, bedad."

In the course of time the party, traversing the ground contiguous to the public road, came within sight of the green dwelling among the trees. Barnes' interest revived. His second view of the house increased his wonder and admiration. If O'Down had not actually located it among the trees for him he would have been at a loss to discover it, although it was immediately in front of him and in direct line of vision.

De Soto was seen approaching through the green sea, his head appearing and disappearing intermittently in the billows formed by the undulating underbrush. He shook hands with Barnes a moment later.

"I'm glad you had the sense to bring Mr. Barnes with you, O'Dowd," said he. "You didn't mention him when you telephoned that you were personally conducting a sightseeing party. I tried to catch you afterward on the telephone, but you had left the Tavern. Mrs. Collier wanted me to ask you to capture Mr. Barnes for dinner tonight."

BRONCHIAL ASTHMA

Choking and Gasping for Breath Relieved by "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MRS. PENNINGTON

NEW ROCKLAND, P.Q.

"In 1919, I was taken with Bronchial Asthma and no one knows what I suffered with it during the winter. I began having Choking Spells—gasping for breath and could not speak. I would have one of these bad spells in the evening, one during the night, and one in the morning. The doctor said he could do nothing for me.

"In the spring of 1920, I started taking "Fruit-a-tives" and in a few days, the choking spells stopped, and I have had none since May 7th, 1920. I have so wanted to tell other sufferers who have the same trouble about "Fruit-a-tives" for I know how they must suffer.

Some thought the Asthma would come back on me as winter came on but it has not, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives" Mrs. J. M. PENNINGTON.

"Mrs. Collier is the sister of Mr. Curtis," explained O'Dowd. Then he turned upon De Soto incredulously. "For the love of Pat," he cried, "what's come over them? Why, I made so bold as to suggest last night that you were a chap worth cultivating, Barnes—and that you wouldn't be long in the neighborhood—but to save your feelings I'll not repeat what they said, the two of them. What changed them over, De Soto?"

"A chance remark of Miss Cameron's at lunch today. She wondered if Barnes could be the chap who wrote the articles about Peru and the Incas, or something of the sort, and that set them to looking up the back numbers of the Geographic Magazine in Mr. Curtis' library. Not only did they find the articles but they found your picture. I had no difficulty in deciding that you were one and the same. The atmosphere cleared in a jiffy. It became even clearer when it was discovered that you have had a few ancestors and are received in good society—both here and abroad, as the late Frederic Townsend Martin would have said. I hereby officially present the result of subsequent deliberation. Mr. Barnes is invited to dine with us tonight."

Barnes' heart was still pounding rapidly as he made the rueful admission that he "didn't have a thing to wear." He couldn't think of accepting the gracious invitation—

"If they'll take me as I am," began Barnes, doubtfully.

"I say," called out O'Dowd to the sheriff, who was gazing longingly at the horses tethered at the bottom of the slope, "would ye mind leading Mr. Barnes' nag back to the Tavern? He is stopping to dinner. And, while I think of it, are you satisfied, Mr. Sheriff, with the day's work? If not you will be welcome again at any time if ye'll only telephone a half minute in advance." To Barnes he said: "We'll send you down in the automobile tonight, provided it has survived the day. We're expecting the poor thing to die in its tracks at almost any instant."

Ten minutes later Barnes passed through the portals of Green Fancy.

CHAPTER IX.

The First Wayfarer, the Second Wayfarer and the Spirit of Chivalry Ascendant.

The wide green door, set far back in a recess not unlike a kiosk, was opened by a man servant who might easily have been mistaken for a waiter from Delmonico's or Sherry's.

"Say to Mrs. Collier, Nicholas, that Mr. Barnes is here for dinner," said De Soto. "I will make the cocktails this evening."

Much to Barnes' surprise—and disappointment—the interior of the house failed to sustain the bewildering effect produced by the exterior. The entrance hall and the living room into which he was conducted by the two men were singularly like others that he had seen. The latter, for example, was of ordinary dimensions, furnished with a thought for comfort rather than elegance or even good taste. The couches and chairs were low and deep and comfortable, as if intended for men only, and they were covered with rich, gay materials; the hangings at the windows were of deep blue and gold; the walls an unobtrusive cream color, almost literally thatched with etchings.

The stairs were thickly carpeted. At the top his guide turned to the left and led the way down a long corridor. They passed at least four doors before O'Dowd stopped and threw open the fifth on that side of the hall. There were still two more doors beyond.

"Suggests a hotel, doesn't it?" said the Irishman, standing aside for Barnes to enter. "All of the sleeping apartments are on this floor, and the baths and boudoirs and what not. The garret is above, and that's where we deposit our family skeletons, intern our grievances, store our stock of spitefulness and hide all the little devils that must come sneaking up from the city with us whether we will or no. Dabson," addressing the man who had quietly entered the room through the door behind them, "do Mr. Barnes, will ye, and fetch me from Mr. De Soto's room when you've finished. I leave you to Dabson's tender mercies. The saints preserve us! Look at the man's boots! Dabson, get out your brush and dauber first of all. He's been floundering in a bog."

The jovial Irishman retired, leaving Barnes to be "done" by the silent, swift-moving valet. Dabson was young and vigorous and exceedingly well trained. He made short work of "doing" the visitor; barely fifteen minutes elapsed before O'Dowd's return.

Presently they went downstairs together. Lamps had been lighted, many of them, throughout the house. A fire crackled in the cavernous fireplace at the end of the living room and grouped about its cheerful, grateful blaze were the ladies of Green Fancy.

The girl of his thoughts was there, standing slightly aloof from the others, but evidently amused by the tale with which De Soto was regaling them. She was smiling; Barnes saw the sapphire lights sparkling in her eyes and experienced a sensation that was wofully akin to confusion.

She Was There.

But everything went off quite naturally. He favored Miss Cameron with an uncommonly self-possessed smile as she gave her hand to him, and she in turn responded with one faintly suggestive of tolerance, although it certainly would have been recorded by a less sensitive person than Barnes as "ripping."

In reply to his perfunctory "delighted, I'm sure, etc.," she said quite clearly: "Oh, now I remember. I was sure I had seen you before, Mr. Barnes. You are the magic gentleman who sprang like a mushroom out of the earth early yesterday afternoon."

"And frightened you," he said; "whereupon you vanished like the mushroom that is gobbled up by the predatory glutton."

He had thrilled at the sound of her voice. It was the low, deliberate voice of the woman of the crossroads, and, as before, he caught the almost imperceptible accent. The red gleam from the blazing logs fell upon her shining hair; it glistened like gold. She wore a simple evening gown of white, softened over the shoulders and neck with a fall of rare valenciennes lace. There was no jewelry—not even a ring on her slender, tapering fingers.

Mrs. Collier, the hostess, was an elderly, heavy-featured woman, decidedly overdressed. Mrs. Van Dyke, her daughter, was a woman of thirty, tall, dark and handsome in a bold, dashing sort of way. The lackadaisical gentleman with the mustache turned out to be her husband.

"My brother is unable to be with us tonight, Mr. Barnes," explained Mrs. Collier. "Mr. O'Dowd may have told you that he is an invalid. Quite rarely is he well enough to leave his room. He has begged me to present his apologies and regrets to you. Another time, perhaps, you will give him the pleasure he is missing tonight."

De Soto's cocktails came in. Miss Cameron did not take one. O'Dowd proposed a toast.

"To the rascals who went gunning for the other rascals. But for them we should be short at least one member of this agreeable company."

It was rather startling. Barnes' glass stopped half way to his lips. An instant later he drained it. He accepted the toast as a compliment from the whilom Irishman, and not as a tribute to the prowess of those mysterious marksmen.

The table in the spacious dining room was one of those long, narrow Italian boards, unmistakably antique and equally rare. Sixteen or eighteen people could have been seated without crowding, and when the seven took their places wide intervals separated them. No effort had been made by the hostess to bring her guests close together, as might have been done by using one end or the center of the table. The serving plates were of silver. Especially beautiful were the long-stemmed water goblets and the graceful champagne glasses. They were blue and white and of a design and quality no longer obtainable except at great cost. The esthetic Barnes was not slow to appreciate the rarity of the glassware and the chaste beauty of the serving plates.

The man Nicholas was evidently the butler, despite his Seventh avenue manner. He was assisted in serving by two stalwart and amazingly clumsy footmen, of similar ilk and nationality. On seeing these additional men servants Barnes began figuratively to count on his fingers the retainers he had so far encountered on the place. Already he had seen six, all of them powerful, rugged fellows. It struck him as extraordinary, and in a way significant, that there should be so many men at Green Fancy.

Much to his disappointment he was not placed near Miss Cameron at table. Indeed she was seated as far away from him as possible. There was a place set between him and De Soto, for symmetry's sake, Barnes concluded. In this he was mistaken; they had barely seated themselves when Mrs. Collier remarked:

"Mr. Curtis' secretary usually joins us here for coffee. He has his dinner with my brother, and then, poor man, comes in for a brief period of relaxation. When my brother is in one of his bad spells poor Mr. Loeb doesn't have much time to himself."

Loeb, the private secretary, came in for coffee. He was a tall, spare man of thirty, pallidly handsome, with dark, studious eyes and features of an unmistakably Hebraic cast, as his name might have foretold. His teeth were marvelously white and his slow smile attractive. More than once during the hour that Loeb spent with them Barnes formed and dismissed a stubborn ever-recurring opinion that the man was not a Jew. Certainly he was not an American Jew. His voice, his manner of speech, his every action stamped him as one born and bred in a land far from Broadway and its counterparts. If a Jew he was of the east as it is measured from Rome—the Jew of the carnal Orient.

And as the evening wore on there came to Barnes the singular fancy that this man was the master and not the servant of the house! He could not put the ridiculous idea out of his mind.

He was to depart at ten. The hour drew near and he had had no opportunity for detached conversation with Miss Cameron. He had listened to her bright retorts to O'Dowd's sallies, and marveled at the ease and composure with which she met the witty Irishman on even terms

Not until the very close of the evening, and when he had resigned himself to hopelessness, did the opportunity come for him to speak with her alone. She caught his eye, and, to his amazement, made a slight movement of her head, unobserved by the others but curiously imperative to him. There was no mistaking the meaning of the direct, intense look that she gave him.

She was appealing to him as a friend—as one on whom she could depend!

The spirit of chivalry took possession of him. His blood leaped to the call. She needed him and he would not fail her. And it was with difficulty that he contrived to hide the exaltation that might have ruined everything!

'Come and Sit Beside Me, Mr. Barnes," She Called Out Gayly.

While he was trying to invent a pretext for drawing her apart from the others she calmly ordered Van Dyke to relinquish his place on the couch beside her to Barnes.

"Come and sit beside me, Mr. Barnes," she called out gayly. "I will not bite you or scratch you or harm you in any way. Ask Mr. O'Dowd, and he will tell you that I am quite docile. I don't bite, do I, Mr. O'Dowd?"

"You do," said O'Dowd promptly. "You do more than that. You devour. Bedad I have to look in a mirror to convince meself that you haven't swallowed me whole. That's another way of telling you, Barnes, that she'll absorb you entirely."

For a few minutes she chided him for his unseemly aversion. He was beginning to think that he had been mistaken in her motive, and that after all she was merely satisfying her vanity. Suddenly, and as she smiled into his eyes, she said, lowering her voice slightly:

"Do not appear surprised at anything I may say to you. Smile as if we were uttering the silliest nonsense. So much depends upon it, Mr. Barnes."

NATIONAL RAILWAYS PROSPECTS BRIGHTEN

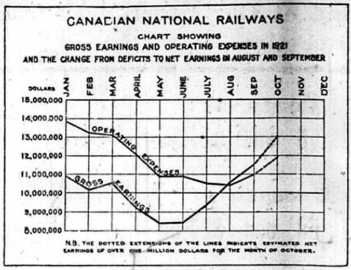
The improved financial showing of the Canadian National Railways for the months of August and September has received general and favorable comment in the press throughout the coutry. It will be of interest to the public to see in graphic manner the monthly advances made since the beginning of the year.

The accompanying chart shows that operating expenses, as indicated by the upper line on the chart, were brought down, month by month, and that they grew gradually towards a meeting with the lower line, which indicates the gross earnings. In August, the lines met and crossed, showing a small margin to the good for that month. In September, the widening gap between the lines indicates net earnings of more than half a million dollars. The trend of the "sweeps" or "curves," as they are sometimes termed, predict a much better showing in October.

able the much better showing made in that month.

A feature of the situation, which constituted a great difficulty encountered by the management in their endeavors to wipe out the deficit, is graphically displayed by the chart which shows that gross earnings dropped after February; that month's gross is usually the lowest in any year, and, commencing with March, gross earnings invariably improve; but during the present year a new condition prevailed; the earnings in the months of April, May and June were lower than those in the months of January and February. This slump in business was general, and affected all lines. If the usual trend of earnings had been followed, the operating economies effected would have brought the lines together at an earlier date.

The chart also shows that the greater reductions in operating expenses were obtained prior to July; this should dispose of the view that the reduction in expenses was largely brought about by the readjustment of wages, effective July 16th.



CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS
CHART SHOWING
GROSS EARNINGS AND OPERATING EXPENSES IN 1921
AND THE CHANGE FROM DEFICITS TO NET EARNINGS IN AUGUST AND SEPTEMBER

N.B. THE DOTTED EXTENSIONS OF THE LINES INDICATE ESTIMATED NET EARNINGS OF OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS FOR THE MONTH OF OCTOBER.

Those who were in close touch with the situation, and who knew what was being done to bring about operating economies, could see well in advance, that a continuation of these measures, with the usual increases in volume of traffic, would bring the lines together, and that with the seasonal crop movement, they should cross. It was hardly expected that the month of August would show net earnings, but reductions in the costs of materials and supplies, coupled with the readjustment of wages, and the increase in gross earnings, were factors which, combined, enabled the management to produce a small balance on the right side for August. The crop movement in September was sufficient to en-

The Canadian National Railways, ealier in the year, informed the people of Canada, by a series of frank, explicit articles in the public press, of some of its problems, and, in particular, of the pressing need of more traffic. The improvement in the relative position of the National lines has been accomplished, not only by the reductions of operating costs, but, also, through the co-operation of the public that realized the truth of the statements made on the National Railways behalf, and who have met the situation in a practical way.

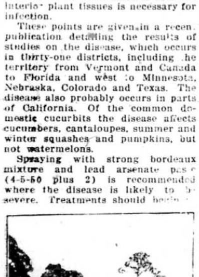
BEETLES TO BLAME.

They Cause Bacterial Wilt In Various Vines.

Infection with the bacterial wilt of cucurbits does not occur through soil or seed. The striped cucumber beetle and the 12 spotted cucumber beetle are both summer carriers, and probably the only means of summer transmission of the disease in the localities that have been studied. Introduction of virulent bacteria into the interior plant tissues is necessary for infection.

These points are given in a recent publication detailing the results of studies on the disease, which occurs in thirty-one districts, including the territory from Vermont and Canada to Florida and west to Minnesota, Nebraska, Colorado and Texas. The disease also probably occurs in parts of California. Of the common domestic cucurbits the disease affects cucumbers, cantaloupes, summer and winter squashes and pumpkins, but not watermelons.

Spraying with strong bordeaux mixture and lead arsenate paste (4-5-50 plus 2) is recommended where the disease is likely to be severe. Treatments should begin soon as the cucumber plants develop their first true leaves and should continue at intervals of about a week until the cucumber beetles practically disappear from the field. In localities where downy mildew is also prevalent the treatments should be continued later as a partial insurance against this disease. The beetles prefer unsprayed plants as food and undoubtedly the efficiency of wilt control would be enhanced if a slightly earlier trap crop, such as squash, were planted along the edges of the cucumber field. The beetles could be easily poisoned there with a strong insecticide.



Large Cucumber Field.

Pulling of wilted vines during the first part of the season, or as long as it can be done without mechanically injuring the healthy plants, will greatly assist in controlling bacterial wilt if consistently done in all neighboring fields. The diseased vines should be buried, or otherwise removed from access by the beetles.

Where a few plants only are grown in garden plots, screening the hills with fine mosquito netting will prevent the appearance of the disease.

For control in greenhouses the beetles, in the first place, should be kept out. Do not grow cucurbits nor pile cucurbit refuse in the immediate vicinity of green houses, as this attracts the beetles and many will later find their way into the houses. If the beetles once gain entrance to a house filled with growing plants hand picking is the only remedy to be recommended until some fumigant is found that will kill the beetles without injuring the cucumber plants. Besides destroying the cucumber beetles, great care must be exercised in disinfecting all instruments used in pruning wilted vines before using them again on healthy plants. This may easily be done with a bottle of 1 to 1,000 mercuric chlorid and a sponge.

SUPPORT MEAT GROWERS.

Live Stock Interests Hit by Falling Off In Meat Consumption.

Campaigns for increasing consumption of milk, fruit, vegetables, have been conducted in almost every town and city of North America within the past year or two, and now meat is to have its turn at organized publicity. An "Eat More Meat" campaign was inaugurated at the recent convention of live stock men held at the Agricultural College, Manhattan, Kansas, when strong arguments in favor of the use of more meat in the national diet was advanced, more particularly by the head of the animal husbandry department of the college, Dr. C. W. Campbell.

Considering that Canadian exporters of fat cattle to Great Britain have of late been able to secure supplies in Kansas City, among other markets, at a price sufficiently below that existing on our home market to allow them to ship the cattle through Toronto to Montreal for export, it is not to be wondered at that stock raisers of the State of Kansas should be among the first to put forth a special effort to encourage increased consumption of meat in their own country.

In Canada, cattle, calf and hog prices continue to decline, while in the United States prices for cattle at least are beginning to show some sign of holding steady, after having experienced a much more serious slump than has occurred here. Continued decline in live stock prices here as in the United States is no doubt largely due to holding back on the part of meat consumers, and though the expense of a campaign to increase consumption could be avoided by bringing down the price of meat, it is quite likely that, within a few months, some publicity expert will bring about the holding of an "Eat More Meat" campaign, in imitation of the Americans. In view of the efforts by producers of other foods to popularize their products it looks as though the live stock men and meat purveyors can no longer proceed on the strength of the saying "that good wine needs no bush."

The live stock men claim in favor of the product for which they produce the raw material, every advantage as food that is claimed by producers of milk, fruit and vegetables, except the single one of providing vitamines. But, they point out, meats provide the other great necessities so economically that the consumer can well afford to secure his supply of vitamines elsewhere. Quoting from tables prepared by Dr. Henry C. Sherman, of Columbia University, a recognized authority on human nutrition, Dr. Campbell, in his address at Manhattan, pointed out that "as a source of protein, the most expensive essential in the human diet, one pound of rib roll, one pound of flank, chuck or round steak, one pound of lamb chops, one pound of leg of mutton or one pound of fresh ham, is equivalent to approximately three quarts of milk or one dozen eggs."

The tables mentioned also show that as a source of energy one pound of salt pork is equivalent to five and three-fourth quarts of milk, or three and three-fourths dozen eggs, one pound of sausage to three quarts of milk or two dozen eggs, and one pound of bacon to four quarts of milk or two and three-fourths dozen eggs, and one pound of roast beef to two and one-half quarts of milk or one and three-fourths dozen eggs.

Poultry Notes.

Cleanliness is an enemy of disease.

Feed fowls well but better have them a little hungry than overfed.

Charred corn occasionally makes a good feed, especially in cold weather.

The hen that cackles loudest and longest doesn't always lay the most eggs.

Poultry soon become accustomed to regular hours of feeding. Don't disappoint them.

Pullets and cockerels should be at least nine months old before they are used for breeding purposes.

One objection to using very much sloppy food is that it often leads to filth and unsanitary conditions.

Take care of your setting hens, feed and water them regularly.

Perhaps the greatest drawback to turkey farms is the lack of range.

When the chicks have learned to roost it is much easier to protect them from mites.

Mites, lice and fleas are the prolific and everlasting root of most of the troubles of the poultry raiser.

Methods of Keeping Cow Records.

Four things are necessary for keeping cow records:

1. A monthly milk sheet, ruled so that there shall be a column for recording the weight of the morning and evening milking of each cow for each day of the month, though some use a sheet ruled for three days only, and estimate the weight of milk given for the month from these three days, which may be consecutive or on the 1st, 10th and 20th of the month, making ten day periods between.

2. A milk scale, preferably one having a dial-face and two hands, one of which shows the net weight of milk in the pail, when properly set. This scale costs about five dollars.

3. A four to eight-bottle Babcock test, where it is desired to know what each cow's milk tests in fat. This will cost from eight to twelve dollars complete.

4. The fourth and most important requirement is, "The-will-to-do." Without this, milk sheets, scales, testers, etc., are valueless. By having scale, sheet, pencil, sample bottles properly labelled, etc., all conveniently arranged, it takes but little time to keep a record of each milking cow in the herd.

We would add a fifth need, which is, some form of permanent record book for monthly totals and tests, as milk sheets, and notes or records of testing, are likely to be lost and not available for reference. But if these are recorded once a month in a permanent form, they will prove a source of help in breeding, feeding and weeding dairy cows.—H. H. Dean, O. A. College, Guelph.

On New Frocks.

In many of the new fall frocks the lower half of the sleeve is made of silk if the dress is of wool fabric, or of net, chiffon or georgette if of satin or taffeta.

Knitted Silk Scarfs.

Knitted silk scarfs are popular and come in a wide range of colors and weaves.

Hit by U. S. Tariff.

The effect of the United States Emergency Tariff Act in reducing Canadian exports to the United States, is shown in a table included in the bulletin of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The act was passed by Congress on May 23, and became effective on May 28, last.

During the three months June, July and August of 1920, Canada sent 3,176,158 pounds of butter and butter substitutes into the United States; during the corresponding three months of the present year the total exports of these aritcles to that country amounted to 200,924 pounds. In cheese and substitutes therefor, only 13,495 pounds were exported during the three months of this year, compared with 120,848 pounds last year. In fresh or frozen beef, veal, mutton, lamb and pork, 5,208,000 pounds for the three months this year, as against 9,420,500 pounds during the similar period of 1920. Meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not specially provided for, 442,744 pounds, as compared with 1,013,985 pounds; fresh milk, 451,525 gallons, as against 573,945 gallons; milk, preserved, condensed or sterilized, 1,163,224 pounds, as against 6,159,531 pounds; potatoes, 66,749 bushels as against 249,514 bushels; cattle, 18,811 head, as against 58,867 head; wheat flour and semolina, 11,627 barrels, as against 74,649 barrels; wool, 18,652 pounds, as against 1,298,987 pounds.

FALL AND WINTER FASHIONS

Styles Thus Far Only Guesswork and May Be Obliterated by Modes at French Openings.

So far fall and winter styles are really guesswork, and the models that have been brought out already may lose caste when the French openings have spread their influence throughout the fashion world. Just at present simplicity seems to be the style rule, and the low waistline frocks that are being offered for early fall street wear are both simple and smart.

One little long waisted frock recently seen was of navy crepe meteor—a fabric, by the way, that seems to be having a strong vogue for fall—the waist and underneath skirt stitched in white so as to give it a checked appearance. The skirt proper, laid in three-inch flat plaits, was attached to the waist at the hip line and a loosely draped chain girdle was of blue tone bakelite—the material so favored for parasol handles.

Test Seeds Before Sowing.

Practically the only element in crop production that the farmer has completely under his own control is the planting of good seed.

It is important that farm seeds be tested before they are sown. Otherwise, a full crop cannot be grown even under the most favorable weather conditions.

Seed testing for practical results, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture, can be done much more easily than is generally believed.

The essential preparation for making seed tests consists of providing the simple apparatus necessary and of becoming familiar with the general purposes and methods of testing and the features of importance peculiar to tests of particular kinds of seeds. Ask the county agent, or write the Department of Agriculture for a bulletin.

All classes of stock will give better returns where a variety of food is supplied. A mixture of grain is generally better than feeding only one kind.

THE SHAWL GOWN IN NEW FASHIONS

Spanish Garment That Is Cozy Indoor Outfit.

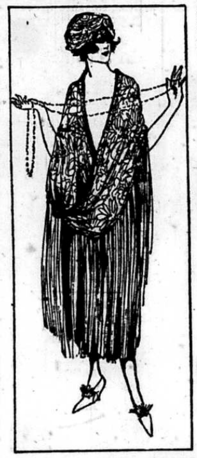
Material Too Valuable to Be Cut; Cleverly Folded to Give Most Pleasing Outline.

The fascinating garment which the French call "un saut de lit" is very much in evidence just now, observes a Paris fashion authority. Life is so full of movement that one is only too happy to take a short rest when one can, and it is such a comfort to throw on a picturesque garment which does not restrain the form anywhere, but which, nevertheless, looks attractive enough to be worn at the tea table.

Jenny makes a specialty of cozy indoor wraps and I have sketched one of her latest models for your benefit. It was made of very soft and rich satin in a delicious blush-rose tint and the immensely long chenille fringes were of the same color.

This was a "throw on" garment without sleeves, a sort of glorified cape, which was easily draped up over the arms at the sides.

I saw, and admired, a similar model made of a genuine Spanish shawl, covered with wonderful embroideries. This shawl was not cut—it was much too valuable for that—but it was folded so cleverly that it gave the outline indicated in my sketch when on the figure.



Robe d'Interieur Cut From Spanish Shawl of Orange, Crimson, Blue and Green, With Fringe of Orange Silk.

Many of the newest tea and rest gowns are lavishly trimmed with wide fringes—in chenille, heavy silk, painted wooden beads, etc. Of these the chenille fringes are much the most effective, but they must be long and thick.

Knotted silk fringes are also attractive and in some cases they are three-quarters of a yard wide, forming in themselves a waving flounce.

BEAUTY IS SOUGHT BY ALL

Attractiveness, the Ambition of Woman and She Has Not Tried to Conceal It From the World.

Beauty? That has been the ambition of woman from time immemorial, and she has not even tried to conceal it from herself or the world. And the truth of the matter is that the vanity of the male sex has been even more inordinate than that of the female, as we find this desire expressed in the feathers of cock birds and the pelage of other animals, and not by any means obscure in the male human being.

The secret of beauty is to be found in the mind. Every human face and figure is merely the physical conformation of the mind which directs it, and the same is true of lower animals. It always has been my belief, says a writer in Forum, that if a few children could be isolated from contact with the masses, and their environments made so perfectly and consistently beautiful that no discord or lack of harmony should ever address itself to the minds of these children, that their health should remain good, that kindness, gentleness and the utmost refinement alone should influence their lives, then such children would improve in beauty as much as they would in moral courage. In one or two or ten generations the end would not be accomplished, nor even in a thousand, but the direction would be plainly indicated.

FASHIONS IN BRIEF

Ladder-stitching is effective on white lingerie blouses.

Palm beach suits of silk are featuring silhouette embroidery.

Huge flowers plastered flat against the brims are much seen in hat models.

Mauve rose is the leading color and much buttercup yellow is being used for frocks.

Brilliant scarlet wool coats hold their own from season to season as practical wraps.

Printed plaited chiffon blouses are extremely good with plaited satin or taffeta skirts, and the combinations of colors are too numerous to mention.

Light colored dresses in silk crepe or in organdie are shown with wide sash of black taffeta ribbon bowed at the side or the front.

Jade and blue, mikado red and taupe, mahogany and bronze are favored color combinations.

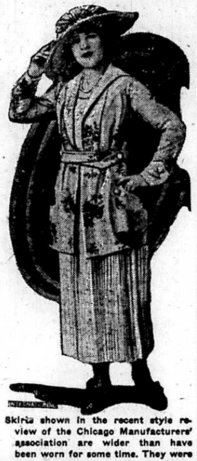
Wider Skirt Is Feature of Chicago Style Review.

Coats to Be Short, Suits Have No Pockets or Cuffs and Muffs Are Barred.

According to the association nearly everything in suits and coats and dresses will be brown or moose, heavily embroidered and beaded. Gold and silver thread embroideries especially will be shown. Beads will be used on everything except the most strictly tailored garments.

As for the suits, the coats will be fairly short, and the skirts perfectly plain. The jackets will have big fur collars and fur about the bottom of beaver, seal, dark squirrel, or taupe nutria.

Nothing will keep warm the hands of the fashionably gowned. There are no cuffs or pockets on the suit, and muffs are quite out. The bodices of these jackets will be quite close fitting, as milady has signified that she has had enough of loosely fitting things, but skirts will have a decided flare. Tassels will be found every place a tassel can be. Quantities of elaborate buttons of rich shades will be used. Silk bolivia, chiffon velvet, duvetyn, duvette, and duvet de laine are the materials from which the winter suits will be fashioned.



Skirts shown in the recent style review of the Chicago Manufacturers' association are wider than have been worn for some time. They were not much shorter, however, twelve inches from the ground being declared to be the correct length.

Cloth coats will be forty-eight inches in length, embroidered in gold or silver thread, with huge capular collars of fur and with fur cuffs and pockets. But the fur coats will be shorter. They will be thirty-six inches and have large collars and cuffs, and fur buttons and belt. No fur combinations at all will be used this season.

The evening wraps will be fairly plain, with big fur collars, wide at the bottom, and lapping over 20 inches where they fasten.

Shoestring belts and buckles of self material, silver and gold embroidery, and either high choker collars, or a neck line cut only three inches from the base of the throat, one pocket next to the seam, and tight three-quarter sleeves, with white cuffs to the wrist are the new features of the tailleur and afternoon frocks. Many of them will have deep hems, buttons all the way down the back, and white lace yokes. Duvetyn and velvet in moose and brown, with an occasional Copenhagen blue will be the material most in vogue.

For the fluffy young person, evening dresses of black lace over charmeuse, with French flowers will be shown, and for the woman given to severer lines; gowns beaded from top to bottom in all sorts of gorgeous colors. Both straps will be used.

Gowns will be somewhat higher cut this year, both in front and in back, and some of them will even have little sleeves.

LIKE COOL FROCKS

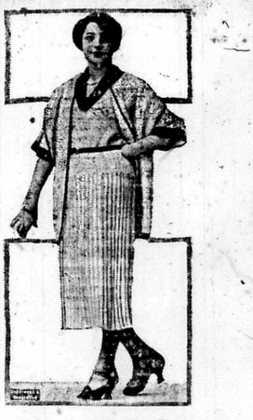
Pastel Shades for Warm Weather—Pale Green Coolest.

Colors Play Most Important Part in Milady's Comfort on Hot Midsummer Days.

Though it is rather maddening to be told how cool we look on a hot summer day, when we are feeling quite the opposite, after the first indignation has worn off the remark is apt to have a psychological effect that actually makes us feel cooler, points out a fashion correspondent.

And, after all, it is a very big compliment to be told that we look cool when the weather makes such an appearance almost impossible, for what is less attractive than any one who is obviously hot?

Cool colors and cool fabrics go a long way toward making a cool summer. This is evidenced by the usual custom of dressing our rooms in their summer clothes if we are to inhabit them during the warm weather. Heavy velvet and brocade hangings give way to cretonnes or silks in cool shades and elaborate formal curtains are replaced by simple sheer affairs. Thick rugs are taken up too, and all this is done because it makes the rooms look cooler, not because these winter trappings actually add to the heat of the house.



An outdooring frock with a skirt of kumsi-kumsa and overblouse of printed dew-kist. With it is worn a wide-brimmed sailor, crown encircled with double ruching of satin de luxe.

This principle holds good in dressing ourselves, too, and pastel shades in delicate fabrics rule our lives in summer if we are fortunate enough to be out of town where such things are appropriate. But even among pastel shades there are some that are cooler than others, and we are not apt to take this into consideration in choosing our Swiss and organdie frocks. Pale green, the shade that has appropriately been called "seafoam," has perhaps the most cooling effect upon the eye. White, of course, is notably chilly, and pale blue has the same tendencies. Shades of rose and yellow have warmth and light, and though they are favorite summer colors on a really sizzling day their wearers will not look as comfortable as they might.

Sterilization Is Necessary.

Sterilization of dairy utensils is necessary for the production of dairy products of high quality, particularly milk and cream, because the washing of dairy utensils, at least by the process ordinarily used, is not sufficient to insure freedom from infection and contamination.

Good Laying Strain.

A good laying strain of hens will keep busy laying all during the breeding season if they are shut up and their broodiness broken each time.

On Saturday night what might have been a bad fire was discovered in Mr. W. D. Midmer's factory under a filing bench. The blaze was discovered in time to be quenched with a few pails of water, but had it got a little more start a serious fire would have developed. When Mr. Midmer left the factory at closing time everything was apparently all right, and the doors were locked. When the fire was discovered the doors were found unlocked.

Early Sunday morning fire destroyed the residence of Mr. Alf. McCutcheon situated in the Village of Roblin. It is thought the fire was caused by a defective chimney. Mr. McCutcheon built a fire in the kitchen stove and left for the barn to do the milking. Shortly afterwards the fire was discovered but it had too big a start with the result that the building was completely destroyed. Some of the household effects were saved. We understand Mr. McCutcheon has some insurance. Hard work by the neighbors kept the fire from spreading.

A rumor is being circulated in Kingston that the Liberals of Lennox and Addington have been advised by Ottawa to vote for Mr. Carscallen. The fact remains that the Liberals of this county have not endorsed any candidate, and have not received any request from Ottawa as to how they should vote. While the Liberals have no objection to Mr. Carscallen personally, the cause he represents is far from the Liberal ideals, and the Liberals of this county will certainly vote against the Meighen Government, and Mr. Sexsmith will receive their support.

A Big Industry.

Nearly three million feet of carbon dioxide for use in the manufacture of soft drinks and soda water were produced in Canadian establishments in 1918, according to a report issued this month by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. These figures, it may be said without fear of contradiction, are decidedly out-of-date, rendered so not only by the lapse of time but by the irruption of hotter weather than 1918, ever dreamed of July, 1921, probably consumed several million feet of carbon dioxide, via the soda straw.

Be that as it may, nearly $2,000,000 are invested in this fair and warmer land in plants producing various compressed gases, while 33 million feet of oxygen were produced in 1918. This gives cause to pause and wonder whether the use of about one million feet of the oxygenic total might not have so exhilarated Georges Carpentier that he could have walloped Dempsey into the land from which even oxygen does not bring one back. That would have been a proper export and use of Canadian oxygen.

Oxygen is quoted at an average price of $19.90 per thousand cubic feet, which does not make it the cheapest resuscitator even in these days of the rapacious bootlegger.
